

Increasing interest for Good Clinical Practice courses from Research Professionals around Australia – June 2006

Nucleus Network teamed with School of Enterprise, Melbourne University, and Clinical Network Services at the Association for Regulatory and Clinical Scientists (ARCS) Annual Scientific Congress, "Working Together to Make a Difference" held from 5th - 7th June 2006 at the Sydney Hilton.

"It was encouraging to meet so many CRAs, CRCs, regulatory and data management professionals from around at this conference", Robyn Lichter, Nucleus Network Education and Training Manager said. "We received keen interest for future participation in GCP courses as well as many enquiries on post graduate studies for clinical research. Professionals are aiming to refresh their practical knowledge and keep abreast of the fast moving changes within our Industry". Australian Clinical Researchers are becoming more acutely aware that continuous education, a solid understanding of GCP and attaining certification are paramount for sustaining 's competitive edge in clinical research. Nucleus Network Education, Melbourne University and Clinical Network Services received many enquiries from clinical sites and commercial sponsors.

Nucleus Network Education will continue its efforts to make accredited GCP programs and certification more widely available throughout and looks forward to providing its first GCP course for Physician and Investigators in August this year.
